yesterday.

This evening I was honored to speak at the Bernie Sanders rally in NYC. I want to be clear that I did not vet my comments with the Sanders' campaign prior to my speech in which I referred to several members of congress, who put the interests of Big Pharma and the private insurance industry ahead of their constituents as "corporate whores" as defined below. I said this within the context of the obscene amount of money our legislators received in the run up to the Affordable Care Act and how it resulted in no public option, no rate regulation, and no ability to negotiate drug prices. Unfortunately, my words have been taken out of context and I have been accused of calling Secretary Clinton a whore. I have tremendous respect for Secretary Clinton and have avoided saying anything personal about her or President Clinton during this entire campaign. Nonetheless, I want to apologize to Secretary Clinton and anyone else who was offended by this. I will also avoid using this term from now on.

Subject: ■ Should Libya pay us back?

We have a giant deficit. They have a lot of oil. Most Americans would choose not to engage in the world because of that deficit. If we want to continue to engage in the world, gestures like having oil rich countries partially pay us back doesn't seem crazy to me.

Do we prefer cuts to Head Start? Or WIC? Or Medicaid? Because we live in deficit politics, and that's what is happening and will be happening even more.

Greg Sargent @ThePlumLineGS · 8 Apr 2016

Bernie cannot undermine Dem nominee. His position on climate makes that impossible:
wapo.st/1VdhEP0

> And finally, the most compelling reason Sanders probably will do the right thing and work to unite the party is this: Climate change. Just yesterday, Sanders tweeted: "Climate change is the single greatest threat facing our planet." He also tweeted:
> Bernie Sanders
> @BernieSanders
> Follow
> As a father of four and a grandfather of seven, I care about leaving a healthy, livable planet for all of our kids and grandchildren.
> 4:27 PM - 7 Apr 2016
> 2,378 7,641
> Sanders cannot undermine the Dem nominee if he really believes these things, which he surely does. As Sanders knows, even if it's true that his climate agenda is more ambitious than Clinton's is, she would do everything possible to facilitate U.S. engagement in the Paris global climate accord and make it a success — including protect Obama's Clean Power Plan, which is key to our ability to meet our international commitments — while a GOP president would do everything possible to undermine both.

Ben Spielberg @BenSpielberg · 6 Apr 2016

@neeratanden Here's what I see generally: 34justice.com/2016/03/20/pro… @JennBinis attacks on Sanders.

The only specific "attack" on Clinton that Tomasky actually attributes to Sanders is his call for Clinton to release the transcripts of three speeches Goldman Sachs paid her $225,000 (each) to make during the past few years. But Sanders' critique here is completely fair (as is what Tomasky calls Sanders' "anti-Rahm Emanuel tincture"). Clinton has repeatedly claimed that the money she receives from Wall Street doesn't influence her; the American people have a right to know how her remarks to bankers comport with her professed commitment to regulate them (though how her comments could possibly look as bad as her continued refusal to share them is anyone's guess).

To be fair, the precise definition of "attack" is open for debate, but despite Krugman's assertions to the contrary, the fact that Clinton's campaign has been much more insidious isn't. Throughout the primary, the Clinton campaign has repeatedly distorted the truth. Clinton has disingenuously accused Sanders of sexism and racism, made false statements about his health care plan and history of health care advocacy, and misled the public about his record on the auto industry, immigration, Wall Street, and a variety of other issues. Her team has also engaged in red-baiting, trashed taxes Democrats are supposed to support, and co-opted the language of intersectionality to inaccurately paint Sanders – a rare politician who recognizes the connections between social and economic issues and is advancing a comprehensive social justice agenda – as a single-issue candidate. Clinton's campaign might not embody "the most negative campaign of any Democratic presidential candidate...in a presidential primary season"

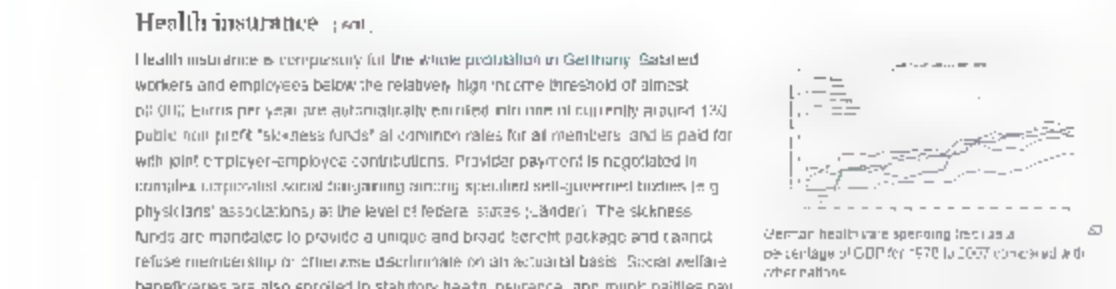
@neeratanden @ErinTaylor14 Public insurance not private Option is the choice of the individual



Health insurance [edit]

Health insurance is compulsory for the whole population in Germany. Salaried workers and employees below the relatively high income threshold of almost [illegible] Euros per year are automatically enrolled into one of currently around 130 public non profit "sickness funds" at common rates for all members and is paid for with joint employer-employee contributions. Provider payment is negotiated in complex corporatist social bargaining among specialist self-governed bodies (e.g. physicians' associations) at the level of federal states (Länder). The sickness funds are mandated to provide a unique and broad benefit package and cannot refuse membership or otherwise discriminate on an actuarial basis. Social welfare beneficiaries are also enrolled in statutory health insurance, and public entities pay

German healthcare spending (red) as a percentage of GDP for 1970 to 2007 compared to other nations

> Well, a Democratic Socialist—all right, we're talking about words here. And Bernie can call himself anything he wants. He is basically a liberal Democrat, and he is a Democrat that—he runs as an Independent because he doesn't like the structure and the money that gets involved. And he actually has, I think, some good points on campaign finance reform. The bottom line is that Bernie Sanders votes with the Democrats 98% of the time.

Democrats have no chance against @realDonaldTrump, unless they nominate Sanders static.currentaffairs.org/2016/02/unless... @neeratanden > actually is hyper-cosy with Wall Street, and actually does change her positions based on expediency, all she can do is issue further implausible denials, which will further embolden Trump. Nor does she have a single offensive weapon at her disposal, since every legitimate criticism of Trump's background (inconsistent political positions, shady financial dealings, pattern of deception) is equally applicable to Clinton, and he knows how to make such things slide off him, whereas she does not.

NYT calls this "deeply rooted racial attitudes."

> According to P.P.P., 70 percent of Mr. Trump's voters in South Carolina wish the Confederate battle flag were still flying on their statehouse grounds. (It was removed last summer less than a month after a mass shooting at a black church in Charleston.) The polling firm says that 38 percent of them wish the South had won the Civil War. Only a quarter of Mr. Rubio's supporters share that wish, and even fewer of Mr. Kasich's and Mr. Carson's do.
> Nationally, the YouGov data show a similar trend: Nearly 20 percent of Mr. Trump's voters disagreed with the freeing of slaves in Southern states after the Civil War. Only 5 percent of Mr. Rubio's voters share this view.

Notes

I think the fuller quote is enough to indicate that Killer Mike was not merely saying, "The only reason to vote for Hillary is that she's a woman; don't vote for her just because of that." And I suspect that with even more context, that would be even clearer.

I think what KM is saying is, "Don't vote on the basis of identity. I don't have the same identify as Bernie Sanders, but I recognize that he represents me the best."

All that said... Look: I ain't voting for Bernie. I think he's doing his supporters a huge disservice by not leveling with them about

As per your invitation to be a part of the volunteer steering committee, I would be honored to be a part of this.

I would prefer to not have my title released since as a representative of CSN, I have to stay neutral to candidates.

Thank you so much for this opportunity and please let me know if you need any other help!

Best,

Brenda Romero

President, ASCSN Student Government

College of Southern Nevada

Hi Brenda,

I hope you are doing well! I wanted to thank you coming to meet with Bernie at the CSN the other day.

I would also like to invite you to sit on our volunteer steering committee. In this role, you would be serving the campaign in an advisory capacity and offering feedback on how we can best connect with and mobilize support in the Latino community for the remaining life of the campaign (until February 2016 and again in the fall of 2016 if Senator Sanders receives the nomination).

The campaign would publish a press release announcing the steering committee to the state, so you would be named in that release as a member (with or without your title and firm/organization name, depending on your preference). Members of the committee will be periodically called upon to discuss concerns with us by conference call or by occasionally meeting in person.

We are planning a series of Town Hall events where community leaders and steering committee members will discuss issues as they relate to the Senator's platform. The time commitment will be modest but the impact you can help us make is immeasurable.

Your participation would be tremendously valuable to the work we are doing in Nevada, so I ask that you consider joining our steering committee.

Un abrazo,

Erika Andiola

In a death match between Donald Trump and Roger Ailes, it's really hard to know who to root for... or against, as the case may be.

Here's the latest statement from Fox News on the ongoing feud between the network and Donald Trump.

Statement from a Fox News spokesperson:

"We learned from a secret back channel that the Ayatollah and Putin both intend to treat Donald Trump unfairly when they meet with him if he becomes president — a nefarious source tells us that Trump has his own secret plan to replace the Cabinet with his Twitter followers to see if he should even go to those meetings."
